

in order to facilitate their progress and to secure their attachment to the Crown,' the people of India may well ask, 'Why are similar concessions not accorded to India, or are the Indians less capable and less gifted than the South Africans?' And, further, if the English avail themselves of such pretexts, who is the cause of our having remained behind—we, the quiet and obedient people, or the so-called disinterested, magnanimous teacher?

"It is all useless to misrepresent facts, for it is patent that there is no difference between India of to-day and between India of the middle ages, and all high-sounding statements about our great strides in civilization are but grandiloquent, empty talk. Nobody can deny that the Indians were formerly the great owners of central Asia; their culture was predominant, and some of their towns became the center of learning and knowledge, from which it had spread to the most distant parts of the world. Until quite recently nobody knew scarcely anything about Japan; but unity, coupled with the firm and resolute intention of a handful of men, has produced extraordinary results and vanquished the once much-dreaded power of the North. Afraid of this wonderful success, proud and haughty Albion had to condescend and to seek the friendship and alliance of Japan, which
